White Sox Win Game
In the Ninth Inning

Ayers Blows Up and Issues Passes, Which Are Turned Into Runs—Score, 9-5.

CICOTTE SAVES THE DAY

Yesterday's combat in the concrete coliseum with the White Sox ended in a 9-5 count, Chicago being on the long end of the score.

The game itself was one of those free hitting affairs, first one team leading and then the other. The ninth inning opened with the score a tie, five runs for each side. Doc Ayers, usually reliable, developed a wild streak, two hits mixed with a couple of errors and passes left the way open for a quartet of hostile tallies which settled matters beyond dispute.

It was a great day for the grandstand managers and second guessers. A whole chapter could be written and each sentence starting with the word "if." Red Faber, world's tourist here, and rated as one of the best young right-handers in the world, opposed "Native Son" Joe Engel. Joe did not pitch such poor ball while he remained in the box, neither did Faber, but both were hit freely and neither inspired confidence in their respective managers, consequently Ayers relieved Engel in Washington's half of the fifth, while Cicotte came to Faber's rescue in Chicago's portion of the same round.

Three hits for Ayers. Merito Acosta came across with a pair of singles and a double out of five times up. Capt. McBride also distinguished himself by rapping out three perfectly good hits.

Most of the scoring by both sides was confined to the first five innings. Chicago scored over a run in the opener, and the Nationals tied the score in the final half when Foster's triple to deep right field scored Morgan from first base.

The White Sox accumulated what would ordinarily have been a safe lead by showing over three runs in the second. Washington's half was barren, but in the third the score was again tied. Engel drawing a walk and going to third base on a wild pitch. Acosta's single to center scored him.

The Griffins assumed the lead in the third. Morgan singled and stole. McBride's tacks followed a passed ball, turning the trick.

Blair for Nationals;
Is 1,500 Hitting Fielder

Washington Club Leaves for Second Western Trip

ALL BUT MILAN TO GO

Johnny Blair, one of the best-known athletes of the District, signed a contract with the Nationals yesterday, and will be taken West with the club when it leaves tonight.

Blair is an outfielder, built very much like Howard Shanks. He was obtained from the Martinsburg, W. Va., club of the Tri-City League, where he has been playing the past month, hitting over .300 and putting up a whole of a game in the field.

Until two months ago Blair was an enlisted man in the Engineer Corps, stationed at Washington Barracks, where he played football, basket ball, and base ball.

The Martinsburg club had influence enough to get him out of the service and now the Nationals have grabbed him, because Griff is short of outfielders on account of Milan's injury.

Blair is a left-handed batsman, but throws right-handed. He is fast as a streak and made such a fine impression upon Manager Griffith yesterday that the Old Fox lost no time in signing him to a Washington contract.

Two International League teams wanted Blair and offered him fine inducements, but he jumped at the chance to try out with the Griffins, and was in uniform yesterday, where he practiced in the field and at the bat.

It would not be surprising if Blair was sent in to bat down one of the outfield positions during a number of games on the coming Western trip as his speed has greatly impressed the Old Fox.

Yesterday's defeat failed to put the Nationals into the second division. Boston, by its dual victory over the Browns, slipped into second place, and the Detroit Tigers dropped below the Griffins.

For the final game of the White Sox series here this afternoon Joe Boehling is slated to work for the Nationals and he will be opposed by either Jim Scott or Rube Russell.

Today's game starts promptly at 3 o'clock as the members of both the Washington and Chicago clubs leave on an early train for the West.

Griffith stated last night that he would carry every member of his present team on this trip.

Outfielder Mike Mitchell, recently purchased from the Pittsburgh Pirates, will not join the Nationals in Washington. Mitchell telegraphed Griffith that he would go direct to St. Louis and report in the Mount City ready to work.

Fournier's binder to right field in the second inning had wings on it, and only clever handling of the ball by Danny Modler prevented the hit being turned into a two-bagger.

Demmitt's Demmitt made a three-bagger off Engel in the fifth.

Not the fault of the wisehelmets in the stand that "our boy" Cicotte is not batting in the 300 class, but such of these self-constituted coaches seems to have a different idea or suggestion than the other fellow.

That Cuban kid handily retired Schalk at the plate by a perfect throw when the Sox backstop tried to score on Rube Russell, sending twenty-two of the Sox to the showers.
